While choice A is correct about one fifth of the time, don't overanalyze or assume better options exist. Look for multiple errors and use process of elimination to narrow down choices. Eliminate answers that are grammatically incorrect or alter the sentence's meaning. Focus on concise remaining options, avoiding passive voice if possible. Ignore spelling and capitalization errors as they're not tested. Examine how choices differ to detect potential errors. Re-read sentences with your chosen answer inserted to catch careless mistakes. Trust your ear; "say" each choice mentally to select the one that sounds best. Here are our printable Sentence completion worksheets for teachers at home or school. The task is to identify and correct mistakes in sentences, then rewrite each one without errors. Some lines contain errors, so find and correct them. If no error exists, write a checkmark instead. Rewrite each paragraph with corrected errors. Choose the complete sentence from each set and select the correct verb to finish it. Pick the sentence without an error from each group. One sentence has no mistake, and another set contains errors that need correcting. To fix these mistakes, rewrite each sentence carefully and make any necessary punctuation changes. Use proofreading marks to correct errors in the passage and choose the punctuated sentences from each set.
